KINGDOM COME.

I do not believe the sad story. Of ages of sleep in the tomb : We shall pass far away to the glory And grandeur of Kingdom Come, The paleness of death, and its stillness, May rest on my brow for awhile ; And my spirit may lose in its chiliness The splendor of hope's happy smile.

But the gloom of the grave will be transient And light as the slumbers of worth ; And then I shall blend with the ancient And beautiful forms of the earth. Through the climes of the sky, and the bowers Of bliss, evermore I skall roam, That glister in Kingdom Come.

The friends who have parted, before me From life's gloomy passion and pain, When the shadow of death passes o'er me Will smile on me fondly again-Their voices are lost in the soundless Retreats of their endless home; But soon we sha I meet in the boundless Effugence of Kingdom Come.

It was published monthly, for a short time, at Oswego, in New York, but its circulation was too limited for it to be long sustained. But that is "neither here nor there" now, so far as the "Bathing tub" story is concerned, an incident which we here condense.

A cabin-boy of one of the ward-room officers, on board a United States vessel, a good deal given to himself, one day made tinues, "when the aptain asked the gunhis way in the captain's cabin, while they were engaged above making out a strange ail in the horizon. He takes his shoes, clothes, and hat, and couldn't be seen ; "and then." he says. "I went back to the tub. All this didn't take more than half a minute, for I worked sharp, I can tell you. The only thing "else wherefore bleathers yarn.
